

A military parade in North Korea. In the foreground, a dark green truck carries two large, silver, multi-stage missiles mounted on a launcher. The truck is moving along a wide street. In the background, a large, classical-style building with many windows is visible. A large North Korean flag (red, white, and blue stripes with a white star in a red circle) flies from a tall pole. Several banners are visible: one with the Korean text '조선민주주의' (Chosŏn Minjujuŭi), another with '인민공화국' (Inmin Gonghwaguk), and a vertical one with '혁명사상만세' (Myeongryeong Sasang Manse). A large crowd of people is visible in the distance. The text 'Should we be worried' is overlaid in white on the image.

Should we be worried

I'm gonna nuke you

Why should we be Scared of this guy

You think that this guy will do anything just look at him he's all talk and will not do because he will get messed up.

stop laughing guys
i'm being serious

Why do they do this ?

The North Korean dictator's embalmed body rests in a state mausoleum and is open for visitation even to foreign tourists. The local guides have a comprehensive knowledge of Kim's life and eagerly point out details about his great achievements and godlike abilities.

This is really not happy.

North Korea has zero to none amounts of chemical fertiliser, so the government ordered every person to produce hundreds of kilogrammes of faeces. The faeces is usually mixed with straw and used as a replacement, but the excrement is harder to procure than expected. Cases of theft of squat toilets have been reported, and people have installed locks on their lavatories to prevent this.

DROPPING BOMBS